mobility and new co-operation models between the Western Balkan independent theater companies and rest of Europe.

The crisis of Covid-19 has revealed another crisis within performing arts sector. The inability of independent companies to circulate on the cultural map of Europe and gain new experiences in artistic transcultural practice calls into question its further survival in the new circumstances of pandemic and post-pandemic society.

It is the crisis of disappearance of classic venues where independent theatre starts and grows.

Without the existence of a new concept of performing, theater space, creation and collaboration, the survival and work of independent artists as in the capacity before the pandemic is impossible. Gentrification, transformation into post-capitalist society, and number of political reasons unique to each European country make the existence of venues that are available and accessible to independent theatre impossible. Venues play an important role in the cultural ecology in each country and in a larger European context.

TransTheatrics FESTIVAL is working towards better communication among venues, and developing shared business and new artistic models. In learning how to improve the venues have the opportunity to strengthen and make the entire independent theatrescene more sustainable.

This big transformation starts on grassroots level.

TransTheatrics FESTIVAL is envisioned as multi-year round educational, cooperation and producing project tailored towards grassroots venues and independent theatre.

The project connects venues, theatre professionals, governmental decision makers with the aim of building the new kind of network for the betterment of European theatre future.

TransTheatrics FESTIVAL promotes productions, exploration and promotion of new theatrical forms (such as Digital Theatre), educational programs and creative exchange in Europe wide context.
