Project

Field(s)	Contemporary Art / Education / Curatorial practices and discourses / Cultural heritage
Description	Project: WHAT COULD/SHOULD CURATING DO? The project is conceived as an annual program of curatorial workshops, lectures, and studio visits, all with the intention to bring together key international and local figures engaged in curatorial discourse, who specifically are able to offer important institutional knowledge and networks to the program participants. In collaboration with institutional and corporate partners, the intention of the project is to strengthen the next generation of curators and experts by helping them accumulate knowledge and establish new networks and partnerships through the program. The purpose of the ongoing project is to continue to contribute by realizing the following programs and activities: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. Spur the dialogue on freedom and enhance the education of young people, cultivating their knowledge of curatorial practices and tendencies by introducing new research initiatives and encouraging innovative thinking in how to shape the cultural institutions of the future.</li><li>2. Create even more possibilities for the establishment of host-guest relationships (which is very important in order to make sustainable transitions possible and establish relationships of trust), connecting people locally and internationally, supporting cultural values and diversity.</li><li>3. Expand the discussion on what constitutes an institution relevant to the public sphere and wider audiences, which is also part of civic society.</li></ol>
